Exclusive Interview Reveals Intrigue in Gangland Fight

Missoulians chuckled over their morning coffee yesterday when they read in the Missoulian about gangland warfare on Higgins avenue. In an effort to get the story behind the story, the Kaimin established contact with the four principals in the potting hoax. This is their story, unabridged.

The night before the hoax the four of us were driving around, wondering what to do. We remembered a shooting hoax in Butte a couple years ago so we thought it would pull the same deal."

"The next morning (Wednesday) we went downtown and got me blanks. Then we fixed up our outfits. We wore gangster suits, pin-stripe jobs, with the stars up. The 'boss' wore an outfit with a 'slick' outfit. The other three wore an old ragged jacket, Levis, gloves, scuffed shoes, and carried a sack. In the sack was some Bull Durham, a beer opener, old gloves, and a slick with a story in it called 'The One Bullet.'"

At 2 p.m. we were set. One of the victims, started walking back and forth on Penney's corner. Three of us in the car drove around the block until we hit the corner so the 'red' light was just coming on. Two of us got out and talked over to 'Joe' on the corner. 'Gabe' and 'Gabe' were our names. The talk went like this:

"Someone wants to see you, Joe."

"Listen, Gabe, I told the Boss I wanted out."

"Let's go for a ride, Joe."

"By this time people were looking at us. Finally I grabbed Joe and pulled him. He pushed me and started running down Higgins. Just then the light changed and our car started following Joe. He ran into the street. I yelled, 'op, Joe, stop!'

"Then Paul pulled his pistol, aimed it, but a man got in the way. He jumped back. Then Paul red a blank toward Joe. Joe let himself fall in front of the Corner Cigar store and skidded on the wet cement. By that time the car was even with him.

"Some of the crowd in front of the Cigar store tried to help Joe, but Paul showed them the gun. They jumped back. Then Paul and I pulled Joe into the back seat and took off. We turned right at the first alley, then followed a street to the edge of town.

"When we got home we changed clothes and went back to the Cigar store. Joe, the victim, got a kick out of hearing all the people describe the victim. But the biggest kick came from reading the story in the Missoulian. We just about died when we read that our average age was 35. And when we learned the police set up road blocks on the highways out of town we didn't know what to think!"

'The Wise Haffinch' Writes Again After Many Years of Living It Up

(Ed. note: During winter quarter, Kaimin readers were amused by the parables of "wise Haffinch." We traced the author's activities since his graduation in 1934, and found that he now operates an insurance agency in Missoula. We wondered if he could still write such clever satire. He can. His style hasn't changed since 1934.

BY G. M. CRUTCHFIELD

And it came to pass that in the year 1934 Haffinch the Historian was cast from the shelter of his mama Mater. And he then didst unt his grade points on the fins of his left hand and his credits the thumbs of his right hand and decide against crawling back to the nest through the Law nool.

So did he take unto himself a ride and they were blessed with two daughters whose value was worth unto two income tax deductions and later unto two draft deferments and still later to ten ischarge points, so that Haffinch marvelled and said, "How lucky can I get?"

And thus having a close up re-view of the Big Picture, courtesy the Third Army, Haffinch sought life of obscurity and meditation. But then did the bubble burst, for there were two telephones in the house but also two daughters and did Haffinch inadvertently lift a receiver, he was transported to a strange new world wherein teenage girls addressed each other by their last names and asked riddles, one of the other, such as . . .

"What was that odd-ball you were with?"

"He's a real gone wheel."

"Ya gester Chester."

"Are you going out or pound some pages?"

"Ya hot to trot?"

"Did you dig that Cad?"

"Next year I'm going to live it up."

And Haffinch, trembling, would replace the receiver and have the youngest daughter translate and put his mind at rest. So thus it was that Haffinch was jerked from his Peace and Quiet and made to "Come Alive."

Letters to Editor . . Writer Points Out 'Basic Mistake' In First Editorial

Dear Editor:

I did not say the Independent men "occasionally" surpass the Greek men in grades—I said the non-fraternity men "always" averaged higher grades, and as 75 per cent of the students on campus are men it should be obvious that the Independents are getting more out of their courses.

You say we stand to benefit from work by ASMSU committees. Yes, a little, but you have written blistering editorials yourself on how ineffective they and Central board are, and how disinterested they are in getting things done. As you well know, there are many more ways to do something for ASMSU besides joining a committee or running for Central board.

You asked what the education was the Independents are seeking. I would hope it was the same education fraternity men want. In other words, we came here first for our education and our grades prove it. As I'm a member of the male sex I'm afraid I can't tell you what's wrong with the female Independents—maybe they're all in love.

I noticed in the last issue of Venture, you defended the accusation that we are the silent generation by calling us the independent generation. It is my belief that we are still not independent enough.

But the reason for my letter in the first place was the basic mistake of your editorial which was, "Why don't the Independents organize?" You might just as well ask, "Why don't the Independents join a fraternity?" The answer—we're not joiners.

Ted Hewitt.
